

Gina Kuntz Fleming Bio

After graduating from Marian College (now Marian University) with a BA in Elementary Education and an endorsement in Special Education, Gina Kuntz Fleming began her teaching career in MSD of Warren Township in 1993. She taught in special education, general education and gifted education settings at the elementary level. With a Master's in Education from Indiana Wesleyan University and a Master's in K-12 Building Administration from Butler University, Gina served as Principal of Holy Name Catholic School in the Archdiocese of Indianapolis for six years. Thereafter, she was hired as Assistant Superintendent at the Archdiocese. In July 2013, Fleming began her role as Superintendent of Catholic Schools for the Archdiocese of Indianapolis, serving 68 schools, over 2000 teachers and more than 24,000 students.

Gina Kuntz Fleming is married to Scott Fleming and they have two sons, Drew and Noah, who attend Holy Name Catholic School. Drew will graduate in May and intends to become a Roncalli Rebel next fall. The Fleming's are active in parish life at Holy Name as well.

If you ask Mrs. Fleming what she loves most about her career choice, she would say that it has always been about the joy and success of those served. "I still get goose bumps when the light turns on for a child, and I get equally excited when my teaching and leadership positively influences the teaching and learning of others," she states. "It is a blessing to be able to deepen my Catholic roots while watering the roots of those around me."

In her role as Superintendent of Catholic Schools, she hopes to provide the support and resources that administrators and teachers need to fulfill their mission as Catholic school educators, thereby serving students and families well. When asked what she does, she still responds, "I am a teacher." Though her title has changed over the years, the most rewarding aspect of her career is the ability to enlighten, inspire, and empower – that is, to teach!
